Astronomy: Wonders of the stars

With haloed beams I have come to see,
Celestial, luminous gems burning in their vacuum seas
Within which a drop of black
Past the scattered specks in the glowing dust

Lost in surreal wonderment,
As I stare and stare,
Into the canyon of distance defined by light and dark,
Past the scattered specks in the glowing dust

It's roiling flare like the fallen souls,
Enveloped in the furnaces of indigo,
Amongst the radiant swarm of effulgence,
Past the scattered specks in the glowing dust

I thought I saw you,
Aloof, a faint glow creaking in the wind,
Marking your journey as zoetic star dusts,
Silently rippling with life,
Past the scattered specks in the glowing dust

You don a shawl woven from white dwarf stars,
Weaving through the paths of universe and time,
But sooner than later,
You dissolve into the safe haven of the night sky,
Past the scattered specks in the glowing dust
